A number of prior art devices are used to stabilize a patient's head after surgery or other procedures. For example, a patient's head is typically stabilized after surgery by placing a hard plastic plate on the patient's head. While the hard plate facilitates immobilization of the patient's head, it is cumbersome and generally ineffective. The hard plate is cumbersome and uncomfortable for a patient. Moreover, the plate is not effective at stabilizing the patient's head since it does not allow for the movement of the patient's head, thus causing discomfort and possible movement of the skull, since the skull is held in place by the hard plastic plate. Consequently, there is a need for a device which will immobilize a patient's head, is comfortable to wear, is light weight, allows movement of the patient's head, is generally easy to use, has particular application to trauma patients and which will prevent movement of the patient's skull, and will not hinder or delay the subsequent treatment of the patient./* * linux/fs/nfs/nfsmount.c * * Copyright (C) 2002 Trond Myklebust * * NFS filesystem mounting.*/ #include #include #include #include #include #include #include static struct dentry *nfs_do_mount(struct fs_context *fc) { struct nfs_fs_context *ctx
